Quick Comment:

Regarding the proposed housing estate spoiling the Tweed view from Abbotsford House.

The House and view offer pleasure and escape to all of its visitors, a brief respite from the cares of life. A view from the windows across the gardens and fields to the Tweed is relaxing, allowing the mind to wander to days gone by and provides a wonderfully tranquil experience for the visitor. Good for the mental health, for education, for wild life. It is almost sacrilegious to consider building a housing estate in full view, completely spoiling the atmosphere of the house and pleasure for the visitors. The Borders has enough space for goodness sake for it to be built out of sight of such a wonderful monument to a famous writer.
